

According to Peak, most filmmakers never acknowledge the people who make it possible for their productions to be possible (ie: film crew, sherpas and all others who are 'behind the scenes' etc.)

In YOUR opinion, did the filmmakers of the IMAX film you just watched acknowledge all of the 'behind the scenes' people who made this movie possible?

Explain your answer (be sure to state it in a sentence!), using proof (examples) from the movie to back up your view.

The filmmakers of the IMAX Everest movie did a very thorough job of acknowledging all of the behind-the-scenes people needed to make the film happen. (List all who were important, why, and how they were acknowledged.)

The filmmakers of the IMAX Everest movie acknowledged some of the behind-the-scenes people needed to make the film, but overlooked some very key individuals. (Mention who WAS included briefly, but focus upon who wasn't included and WHY they were important)

The filmmakers of the IMAX Everest movie failed to acknowledge the behind-the-scenes people who made the making of their film possible. (State why they are important (general) to the film and WHO exactly they are. Then get specific about why they are important....)
